Internship Experience

PwC, Strategy and Management Consulting, Intern Coventry, UK|2026.01-2026.04

- Project Structure: Led a feasibility study on market entry for the Chinese new-style tea beverage sector, building a research framework spanning macro-level (population of 1.41 billion, per-capita disposable income exceeding RMB 40,000) to micro-level (single-store profitability model), and delivering a comprehensive analysis report to support the client's entry decision;
- Business Analysis: Constructed a three-tier analytical model of "product – consumption scenario – competing brand," using Porter's Five Forces to identify two key barriers: supply-chain depth and digital operations. Outlined four potential entry models (self-build, partnership, franchising, M&A) and designed three entry options (A/B/C). Benchmarked against leading brands such as Naisnow, MIXUE Ice Cream & Tea, and Goodme, proposing a differentiated market-entry strategy;
- Financial Modeling: Developed a single-store profitability model, estimating capital expenditure of RMB 300,000–500,000 and cost structure (raw materials 35–40%, rent and labor each 15–20%), projecting a payback period of 12–18 months. Quantified the labor-cost-control effect (labor accounts for 15–20% of costs) of automated tea-brewing equipment, providing quantitative support for cost optimization and business-model design;
- Key Insights: Identified health-oriented trends (zero additives, real fresh milk) as the baseline for market entry, and defined upstream price-locking and cold-chain capabilities as the core moats. Based on annual reports, industry studies, and national statistics, completed a feasibility analysis quantifying the impact of takeaway platform commissions (approx. 10%) and spoilage fluctuations on net profit, supporting profit forecasts and the client's entry assessment;
